To the NCAA Board of Governors,

We, the undersigned, call upon the NCAA, a governing body meant to serve athletes and our wellbeing, to ensure that the lifesaving power of sport is accessible to all athletes who compete in championship and emerging sports at and for NCAA-member institutions – including transgender athletes. To deny transgender athletes the fundamental right to be who they are, to access the sport they love, and to receive the proven mental and physical health benefits of sport goes against the very principles of the NCAA's Constitution.

By barring transgender athletes, you would be severely limiting the capacity of your member institutions to protect and support their athletes. Moreover, you would be actively disparaging transgender athletes – the same athletes you chose to protect when you agreed to serve on the Board of Governors.

As athletes, we have dedicated our lives to sports. Sports have given us our greatest friends, taught us incredible life lessons, and given us the confidence and drive to succeed in the world. We know that the value of sport goes far beyond the playing field. Sport allows people to develop a sense of self and identity and to reflect what we value as a community. Sport is a tremendous enabler of physical and mental health, teaches valuable lessons on teamwork and discipline, and has brought us lifelong community. Every single student should have access to the lifesaving power of sports.

When Hall of Fame coach of the 2024 NCAA women's basketball champions Dawn Staley – one of the trailblazers for all of women's sports – said trans athletes should play, she understood the courage required to speak out against exclusion. Throughout history, we have seen that segregation and exclusion as policies have never reflected the true values of sport. It's not a surprise that as the legacy of racial discrimination is still felt palpably off the court in higher education with attacks on affirmative action, that on the court anti-trans sports bans disproportionately impact Black and Brown transgender women, as we saw in the lawsuit against Andraya Yearwood and Terri Miller in Connecticut.

Within the context of broad legislative attacks on the rights of trans people in the United States, opposition to trans athletes is driven by certain politicians who seek to control our bodies, not by science or data. Although trans exclusionary efforts claim to “protect women's sports,” in reality, they fail to address any of the real, documented threats to women in sports, namely unequal pay, failure to uphold Title IX, rampant sexual abuse and harassment of women and girl athletes, and a lack of equal resources for men's and women's teams (as we saw in March Madness tournaments just three years ago).

Despite claims by those suing the NCAA over trans inclusion, studies used to justify the exclusion of transgender athletes are methodologically flawed and misinterpreted to further discrimination. In fact, the most current scientific review of transgender women in elite sport (published in 2022 by the Canadian Centre for Ethics in Sport (CCES)) underscores that transgender women do not have an advantage over cis women in sport. Guidelines from the International Olympic Committee (IOC) also reflect the importance of inclusion and science, naming "no presumption of advantage" and "evidence-based approach" as two of their 10 principles. No conclusive data exists to justify a ban of transgender athletes. The IOC's Framework on Fairness, Inclusion, and Nondiscrimination clearly states: Every person has the right to practice sport without discrimination and in a way that respects their health, safety, and dignity.

Anti-trans legislation is largely fueled by propaganda and deception. Media has framed former University of Kentucky swimmer Riley Gaines as the cisgender woman who lost a national championship race at the hands of the NCAA's transgender athlete participation policies. In fact, she tied transgender woman Lia Thomas for 5th place at the 2022 NCAA National Championships. Four other women (all of whom are cisgender) also beat Gaines, preventing her from taking the podium. Lia Thomas was in full compliance of the NCAA's policies. Anti-trans politicians, policymakers, and media at large have divisively used this narrative to incite transphobic hatred and policy, despite the hundreds of swimmers who have stated their support for transgender athletes, endorsing the expertise of medical, athletic, and human rights professionals who helped shape the IOC's inclusive policy.

We implore you, the NCAA's highest governing body and members of an organization focused on supporting the wellbeing of not just athletes but sport itself, to focus on the long-documented needs of NCAA athletes of all genders. We implore you to focus efforts on developing policies driven by research, education, collaboration, and policy to promote a healthy and safe environment for all athletes, NOT discriminatory attempts to sideline an entire group of athletes from the sports they love.

As athletes, we know firsthand that sport has the power to change lives. Allowing transgender athletes within the NCAA to participate in the sports they love as who they truly are alongside their teammates fulfills the true spirit of Olympism we all ascribe to. Sport should never be for a select few. We call on you to be on the right side of history and affirm that sport is truly for us all. Do not ban transgender women from NCAA women's sports.
